Services for violence against women and girls is life-saving and must be part of any #COVID19 response plan.

The #Covid19 crisis is generating high stress levels, leading to an increase in domestic violence worldwide.

Around the world, the @SpotlightInitiative’s teams are working around the clock with governments, civil society organizations and communities to integrate gender-based violence mitigation measures in national response plans to tackle the #coronavirus and to better protect women and girls.

MANAGING TENSIONS AND STRESS IN HOUSEHOLDS

It is normal to be feeling sad, stressed, confused, anxious and scared.
You are not alone.

Here are things you can do to keep you and your family happy while you are staying at home:

- Take time to laugh, play and connect with your support network
- Eat healthy food and try to cook something new
- Find ways to exercise or move your body
- Step outside and breathe fresh air
- Stay offline from news and social media at least 1 hour before sleeping
PEOPLE WITH DISABILITIES AND OTHER VULNERABLE GROUPS

People with disabilities have important health needs and they and their families are often isolated. Now more than ever, we need to make information accessible to persons with disabilities so that they can live well.

People with disabilities have rights just like anyone else – how can we promote access to health care and support especially during times of crisis such as this?

COVID is more dangerous for people with disabilities, older people and people with illnesses. We all have a role to support our friends and family at risk and to keep them safe.

OTHER VULNERABLE GROUPS

COVID does not discriminate – but the impacts of COVID-19 are more significant for people who experience discrimination. With words and actions we can show our solidarity and caring and get through this situation together.
