What does meaningful youth participation and call to action look like for you?

- Lively
  - Means having the specific issues of young people highlighted and discussed and responded to (substantively)
  - Breaking the silence, raising voice

- not tokenistic
  - Inclusive and representative
  - All youth can speak freely

- development
  - collective process
  - Meaningful youth participation for me also means giving voice and ability to influence for the most marginalized. To allow for views that we are not comfortable listening to, and also adults learning through the process
What does meaningful youth participation and call to action look like for you?

- Being able to directly participate in the legislative process and having our voices considered with the importance/value it deserves in intergenerational spaces.
- Youth leading their own agendas in an enabling environment.
- Giving you the platform to engage in anything that concerns them.
- Co-leading and co-creating the process.
- Fearless, intersectional lens.
- Meaningful youth participation is when we are heard and acknowledged. When door opens for us to take our part and do action in a way that works for us and benefits the youth more that is where we became fulfilled as youth.
- Designing with youth during the process, not just including them at the end.
What does meaningful youth participation and call to action look like for you?

- There is a space, a voice, influence and audience for youth participation
- Collective Voice
- not being afraid to be jailed

- Critical thinking and planning, along with political theory needs to be a part of schooling and core curriculums in school
- engaging, free but collective effort, inclusion, youths being heard and encouraged

- All youth can speak freely
- Making everyone heard
- Youth engagement is crucial for action against various agendas. Educating youths, training and developing them, inclusive in decision making promotes youth empowerment also helps find possible solutions to social development issues worldwide.

- Meaningful action means inclusion, equality and justice in all aspects. The dialogue must be intergenerational and intersectional, with accountability and action just not only on paper
As a young feminist, what does feminist accountability look like to you?